MUSEUMSINSEL BERLIN

With its five edifices situated between the River Spree and Kupfergraben, the Museumsinsel Berlin [Museum Island] forms an incomparable ensemble of museum and cultural history, gradually developed over time. Officially declared a World Cultural Heritage Site by UNESCO in 1999, the Museumsinsel illustrates the scope of the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin (National Museums in Berlin) as a universal museum of human culture from its earliest beginnings to the present day. The Staatliche Museen zu Berlin's main institutions form five distinct clusters, the others being the one at Kulturforum as well as those in Dahlem, Charlottenburg and Köpenick. The Alte Nationalgalerie already had its spectacular reopening as part of the Museumsinsel Masterplan in 2001. This was followed in 2006 by the completion of renovation work on the Bode-Museum, while the Neues Museum again went on show to the public in October 2009. In 2013, renovation work commenced on the Pergamonmuseum, Altes Museum will follow. The James-Simon-Galerie, central entrance building and visitor centre for the Museumsinsel, is currently under construction.
